Problems with burning wood stoves

Enlarged burning of a wood commonly used for outdoor decks and porches may cause arsenic poisoning and a host of irreparable physical problems.

Dr. J. Ward Donovan, a toxicologist and assistant professor of medicine with Penn State's Milton S. Eberly Medical Center says, "Prescribed arsenic is used to treat a preservative containing chromium copper arsenate (CCA), a toxic chemical used in the treatment of wood. When the arsenic is released through the burning of the wood, it is carried by the wind and can be inhaled, leading to arsenic poisoning by inhalation. Handling, ash containing arsenic, can also result in arsenic poisoning through the skin."

According to Dr. Donovan, arsenic poisoning can cause neurological problems, numbness in the arms and legs, hair loss, skin rashes, and gastrointestinal problems. Severe symptoms are vomiting, dizziness, and respiratory failure, and certain cases of arsenic poisoning can cause permanent damage to the liver, nervous system, and internal organs.

CAUTION: It is especially dangerous because it is an ordinary and silent enemy. The arsenic is in the wood, and its only cure is prevention. Dr. Donovan warns those with concerns about their burning wood stoves to have them inspected. Annual inspections should be done by a professional, such as a chimney sweep, or other, may call the Pennsylvania Poison Control, located at Hershey Medical Center, at (717) 333-4111 or 1-800-521-0110.

Even though December 15, 1990 is a full sun day before Christmas, the humane Society of Dilbury Area, Inc. is hoping they can give all their shelter animals their gifts early. That's the day the Society will hold its Third Annual Animal Christmas Party at the East Shore Shelter, 7790 Grayson Road, Hamburg, and the West Shore Shelter, 710 Epley Road, Mechanicsburg.

The event will be the Second Annual Animal Christmas Party at the Society's Cumberland Valley Shelter, 2235 County Road, Chambersburg.

All three locations will be open from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. on December 15. Representatives of the Society's Board of Directors and staff as well as volunteers will be on hand to conduct tours of the facilities, answer questions, and share the joy of the holiday with all who attend. The event is free and open to all.

Attendees are encouraged to bring gifts of pet food and toys. The Society is especially grateful for monetary donations, the latter being placed in the "Pet Fund" to help defray the costs of the shelter. And, of course, the practice "early Christmas gifts" to the animals is a most appreciated.
